On a personal level the URGENT activities in general and Summer School in particular has been an incredibly beneficial experience and a great learning opportunity. It gave us a chance to interact with students and teachers of different ethnicity which proved critical in widening the scope of our knowledge but simultaneously, it served as a lesson of immense value on inclusivity and working together as a team despite our differences. This lesson of inclusivity per se became the base on which many new friendships were built on. We worked on a short term project on Green Space optimisation and the experience was rendered even better by the different cultures and the accompanying knowledge everyone brought to the table. It was a great provision for education on the functioning of a work space. Later, we were given an opportunity to host the team in Kashmir, where, other than working on the project itself, we were immensely rejoiced to introduce them to our own culture intimately. Explorations of different locations together helped in developing a synergy and an understanding that transcends cultural differences. Though, we can summarise how the project went, words can hardly do justice to the overall all impact it had on us or the exposure it granted.
